

Reflective Surfaces

The reflective style is all about mirrored products and surfaces, with metal and silver accents to create a cool and chic vibe. Over the past few years, there has been a progression towards eye-catching materials and surfaces, such as glass and mirrored surfaces - which are typically saved for the bathrooms. Now they are being used in the rest of the home.

Reflective surfaces not only carry light around the room, but also create an optical illusion, so that the space seems larger than it actually is (always a plus), and unifies the surfaces in the space.

The key to the reflective style is simple - think all things shiny, glass and mirror.

There is room for some interpretations too, with different finishes giving different light reflection - and added depth and perception.

Emac & Lawton Saxon Pendant Lights

Based on a Victorian-era fixture found in a grand European hotel, the Saxon pendant lamp pairs the intricate open-metalwork typical of flame-powered lanterns with the modern drama of an internal candleless.

Retro Renaissance lighting

The chic bold colours and evocative designs of the retro era are set for a revival in interiors and lighting this year, according to leading Australian lighting company Brilliant Lighting. This can be achieved by mixing vibrant colour with the usual textures of black, white and natural timber in particular blue is set to be a dominant hue this season, bringing a fresh feel. This vibrancy hints at the pop art movement of the mid-century, with the retro feel also achievable by incorporating pared back classic shapes of the mid-century. Update the look by selecting pieces in sophisticated materials and textures throughout the rest of the living space which will also calm the use of colour.

Cool Concrete

Natural materials like rattan, bamboo, rattan and sea grass have become hugely popular in recent months. The flexibility of these materials means they can be used to create a wide range of products for a variety of environments. Naturally, these products are at home out in the garden, but they look their best when bringing the outdoors in.

Aesthetic, raw and cold. Grey concrete charms with the instant character it gives to a room, and has become one of the most trendy materials in interior design, alongside copper (pink or not) and marble. More commonly used with massive and brutalist floor or wall coverings, the industrial material can now be spotted as the primary material in everyday objects like pendant lights, pots, table stools, and more.
